Legislature gives nod for clean energy grant

Ken Luchterhand
Staff Writer

The Ho-Chunk Nation Legislature, in an effort to become more energy independent and lower the Nation's carbon footprint, voted to move forward with the pursuit of a grant to produce compressed natural gas as an alternative to fossil-based fuel.

The central focus of the energy project is an anaerobic digester that could convert organic waste material into natural gas, which would then be compressed for transportation fuel or possibly in homes heating fuel.

If the $1 million grant is awarded, it would require a matching amount of $1 million from the Ho-Chunk Nation. It passed with six votes in favor, three votes against and two votes in abstention.

"Because the Legislature approved applying for the grant doesn't necessarily mean we will go ahead with the project," said Ho-Chunk Nation Attorney Bryan Van Stippen. "First we'll see if we can obtain the grant and then go from there."

The Sustainability Energy Taskforce, created by the Legislature includes, Ho-Chunk Nation Public Relation Specialist Collin Price who presented the project to the Legislature, Van Stippen, HCN Environmental Specialist Kevin Gunderson, along with input from Representative Matt Mullen and Charles Opferman, senior vice president of Greenfire Services, Milwaukee, the consulting firm.

Investigation for the project, dubbed "Eco-Park," began in 2010 by the Taskforce and they have been working on the details ever since. The Nation obtained money to study the feasibility of the project and has since developed a conceptual plan. According to the breakdown, the Nation obtained $150,000 and $50,000 grants in 2010, a $169,000 grant in 2013, and a $149,270 grant in 2014. There is still $97,900 available from the grants to conduct a public relations and education program for the public.

If the Nation should be awarded the grant and move forward with the project, it will create at least five good-paying jobs and provide compressed natural gas for the Nation's fleet and possibly for the public for purchase.

The anaerobic digester is just one aspect of the Eco-Park project. Another aspect is a transfer station and recycling center, Price said, showing photos of garbage on Ho-Chunk land that was disposed of improperly. The transfer station and recycling center would be a place where such items could be gathered and recycled.

In addition to natural gas being produced, compost would be a byproduct of the project, which would then be used to enrich soil. It could possibly be bagged and sold on the wholesale market.

"The biggest cost to the operating costs in labor, then the cost of compressing the gas and finally some chemicals, such as those to adjust the pH of the compost," Opferman said.

One of the main messages Opferman emphasized is that the project is not a huge money-maker, such as a casino. But instead it should be viewed as a means to create some good jobs, save the Nation on some fuel costs, and to reduce the carbon footprint upon the natural resources.

"I'm not trying to paint a rosy picture, but I've been working with the Potawatomi on their digester and they're well into the black," Opferman said.

Subtracting the operating costs, Opferman has calculated that the Nation will be able to make a profit of about $438,000 annually.

Compressed natural gas is cheaper to run and many commercial operations, such as Schneider International, a trucking company, have converted their trucks to compressed natural gas. Also, Kwik Trip is in the process of installing compressed natural gas fill stations and converting their trucks to CNG.

Production costs to create one gallon of compressed natural gas is approximately one dollar, he said.

Another possible byproduct of the digester is anhydrous ammonia, he said. Also, operators of garbage trucks generally have to pay "tipping fees" for disposing of the materials, so that money could be gained by taking garbage from various sources.

The Nation, by itself, does not create enough waste to make the digester feasible, Opferman said. But there are several sources from the surrounding communities that may fulfill the requirements, such as Brockway, Black River Falls, Fort McCoy, and other cities and villages, plus industries and businesses, such as the prison, restaurants and grocery stores.

The grant is being offered by the federal Department of Energy - Office of Indian Energy Policy and Programs.

As for the timeline, it will not be known if the Nation will be awarded the grant until March, and then it will take 90 days before the Nation will receive the funds.

Legislative Financial Examiner Clint Breed was asked if there was money in the general fund to cover that amount.

"There is $1 million in the grant line item, but that is for all the grants for the Nation," Breed said. That amount could be increased in the next fiscal year or a portion used for this grant and the remainder derived from other sources.

Mullen asked Opferman about the construction timeline, if the money became available on July 1, if it could be completed in one year.

Opferman said that six months would be needed for design work before construction could begin, so it may take a little longer than 12 months before completion, if the project were given a green light.

Additional funding for the project could be obtained from USDA Rural Development and the DOI Office of Indian Energy and Economic Development.

Register and vote in what could be our last Secretarial Election

Marlon WhiteEagle
Editor

By now, many tribal members have received mail from the BIA regarding an upcoming Secretarial Election. You have to register to vote by filling out the form and mailing it back to them to be eligible to vote in this election. Secondly, you must vote and mail back your ballot by a certain date for your vote to be counted. This is an editorial is an overview of the process and call to action.

The first thing to remember is we, the General Council Branch, have already voted in favor of these proposed changes to amend our constitution. It's merely a part of the process to make constitutional changes that we open our mail, complete forms, and mail back the forms and ballots.

I'm not sure what the thinking was when this process was first implemented, but it might have been, "If we do things this way, natives don't like signing documents, mailing forms, and participating in government initiatives. This will make our job easy since no change will be afforded to those who don't participate."

This process can be viewed as the US government saying, "you savage natives need to ask the Great White Father for his blessing on any changes you want to make, and you better be darn sure of it."

Let's participate fully and make the changes we have already collectively agreed upon.

The first proposed amendment is to remove the requirement for Secretarial Elections to make amendments to our constitution. This measure makes the Ho-Chunk Nation more autonomous and strengthens our sovereignty.

This is a step that truly empowers our General Council meeting(s). I say meetings because if we have additional issues to address, we are not barred from having more than one General Council meeting. As our constitution currently states, "the General Council branch sets the policy of the Ho-Chunk Nation." The only thing the General Council won't be able to do is deal with hiring and firing of personnel.

One of the flaws within the Ho-Chunk Nation is family influence. Our elected officials are mostly voted in office based on their family and relative votes. If you have a lot of family and relatives, you might have a chance to be elected into office. Buying ads from the Hocak Worak does help as well.

Another example would be what way of life you practice. People tend to agree with people follow their way of worship. But lately, there seems to be mutual respect, or tolerance, among the different belief systems of the Ho-Chunk Nation. Whether that spills over to politics, we don't know that yet.

That being said, the democratic process is a bit skewed in tribal politics. We hope we vote the right person into office based on their platform. They want to change the same thing we would want to change. But once elected, the same people we elect change their views. Elected officials become "deal makers" to get things done. We essential lose representation.

I think of the elimination of the requirement for a Secretarial Election will also reinforce and strengthen our representation as well. I see General Council resolutions as the will of our Ho-Chunk people. As they say, numbers don't lie. And if a resolution passes, whatever it takes to bring it to fruition, those steps should be taken. There would be no more "we can't do that because it is unconstitutional."

The second proposed amendment is to allow the longest serving legislator to calling for a special legislative meeting to vote for a new Vice President who would serve as president pro tem in case the president and vice president offices are vacant.

This change mirrors the US Constitution and is a safeguard to keep a government power structure intact. The occasion of two vacancies is a rare one.

Essentially, its legislature electing another vice president since the existing one has been removed or recalled. The president pro tem would only act as the president while the Election Board conducts a Special Election.

The system appears not to need this measure. But as Kafka said, "It's better to have it and not need it, than it is to need it and not have it."

The last proposed amendment is to eliminate the General Council from the disenrollment process and add the necessary language to rely on evidence and DNA evidence presented in the Judiciary.

Currently, the steps for disenrollment a tribal member include a hearing before an Enrollment Committee, an appeal in Tribal Court, and lastly a vote of 2/3 or more at General Council meeting.

The DNA evidence should be sufficient. The General Council vote may not succeed due to needing 2/3 votes for disenrollment. Putting an individual through a disenrollment before all tribal members is a bit insensitive. If DNA proof doesn't stand, the court should be able to determine they don't meet the enrollment requirements.

Why can't those that don't meet tribal enrollment requirements be proud of their other heritage, whether it's another tribe or different race altogether?

We do have enrolled members who would fail a DNA test. It would be nice to operate on the honor system, but money is involved. Our enrollment doubled just a couple years after per capita payments began. How could we address disenrollment of fraudulent tribal members?

I agreed that disenrollment should go public with a General Council vote.

Please participate in the Secretarial Election to stand by your previous vote to make this proposed amendments a reality.

From the desk of the

Vice President Darren Brinegar:

Greetings Tribal Members,

Letter to the Editor

In response to the "Starfish Syndrome" article, submitted by the Hocak Worak editor, I was glad to see that there are those who are willing to question why some tribal businesses have failed.

In that article, the Editor mentioned a few of these tribal businesses that failed, or appeared to fail, to generate a profit.

In 2004, I was asked to apply for the manager of the Ho-Chunk Textiles operation in Tomah. I did and I was hired on as the manager and head designer. They looked at my past experience in the clothing business and I was told that I could go with what got me to the dance.

I started this business out west with a small crew of family and friends and soon we were a viable, successful business. We were a small group and ended up selling everything we could make. It wasn't casino money but it was a successful business that made a very good product that catered to many celebrities and luminaries.

When I started at HC Textiles I told my boss that I needed some things to be competitive in the textile/fashion field. I had a vision of what we wanted to be and how to get there.

The first thing I asked for was the Internet and a Web page. It took a year to get dial-up and we never got a Website built for us. I asked for more skilled sewers and help on the selling and marketing end. We got neither. I asked to be able to go to shows in Los Angeles and New York to show some of our products. I was never allowed. There were excuses after excuses why we couldn't do this or that.

Our own casinos and hotels were to come to us for their uniforms, they didn't. Even after being told to, they still did not do business with us. This is a similar scenario for the other businesses mentioned in the "Starfish" article. NO support and NO help and people wonder why we can't seem to run anything other than a casino, (and we barely support those).

We are losing good customers, our service is suffering because we don't pay enough to get and keep good help. Even these gaming sites are subject to the same treatment. If they don't seem to make the money that is expected, their budgets get slashed because "they aren't making money." I know because I was there to see the affects of these ridiculous decisions.

I don't know how much more evidence people need to see to show that we need strong leaders that have business logic, acumen and the guts to make change. Without strong business leaders we will continue to pretend that we know what we are doing.

Red Cross asks for blood donations this holiday season

Be part of something meaningful by giving blood

Submitted by Tracy Fox, American Red Cross
The American Red Cross encourages eligible donors to end the year with real meaning by donating blood for hospital patients in need.

Holiday activities, severe weather and seasonal illnesses, like the flu, can pull people away from their regular blood donation schedules. This creates a greater need for blood donations this time of year, especially around the winter holidays. To encourage donations, all those who come to donate Dec. 23, 2015, through Jan. 3, 2016, will get a long-sleeve Red Cross T-shirt, while supplies last.

Jamie Czesak made her first blood donation on Dec. 27, 2013. "As I spent Christmas with my family, I realized how lucky I was to have my health and how we never really know when our last Christmas will be. I decided that I would face my fears and do one of the few things I can do to help save someone's life donate blood."

Healthy donors with all blood types are needed, especially those with types AB, O, B negative and A negative. To make an appointment to donate blood, download the free Red Cross Blood Donor App from app stores, visit redcrossblood.org or call 1-800-RED CROSS (1-800-733-2767). Donors can now use the Blood Donor App to access their donor card and view vital signs from previous donations.

'Tis the Season...for the Flu!

Submitted by Holly Rodenberg, RN, BSN, Nurse Educator

The influenza (flu) season will soon be here. The flu season typically peaks between December and February, but can vary year to year. Holiday gatherings often spread viruses such as the flu around quickly. This article is to provide a little information about the flu, things to help prevent getting it including flu vaccinations and what to do if someone does get it.

What is the flu? The "flu" is an infection of the nose, throat and lungs caused by influenza viruses which can change from year to year. These viruses can cause severe illness resulting in hospital stays and even thousands of deaths each year, particularly in infants and young children, the elderly and other at risk groups.

Who are the people at highest risk of the flu and related complications? Adults over age 50—especially those over age 65, children under 5 years old—especially those under 2 years of age, people with ongoing illnesses (such as diabetes, heart, lung, liver, kidney or other diseases), pregnant women, Native Americans and Alaska Natives, and people with weakened immune systems.

What is one of the most important things a person can do to prevent the flu? Get vaccinated for it. Remember that it takes about two weeks after vaccination to get the most protection from the flu. The supply of flu vaccine can vary so the sooner you get yours, the better. Although it is not a 100% guarantee that you will not get the flu, you should not get nearly as ill if you do get the flu. There are a small group of people who should not get a flu vaccine without first speaking with their doctor including people who have a moderate-to-severe illness with or without a fever (they should wait until they recover to get vaccinated), those with a serious or allergic reaction to the vaccine and people with a history of Guillain-Barré Syndrome.

How is the flu spread? The flu is most commonly spread by droplets made when people with the flu cough, sneeze or talk. These droplets land in the mouths or noses of people nearby. Less often, by touching something that has the flu germ on it and then touching their mouth, nose or eyes.

What are the most common symptoms of the flu? Symptoms can include fever, cough, sore throat, runny or stuffy nose, body aches, headache, chills and fatigue

When can someone with the flu be able to give it to others? People can infect others from 1 day before getting sick to 5 to 7 days after, with some people being infectious longer, especially kids or people with weakened immune systems.

How long after exposure to the flu will it take until I might get sick? If you get the flu it usually begins 1-3 days after exposure to the illness.

Did you know?: The Ho-Chunk Nation has a policy requiring health staff who have direct patient contact or who work in patient care areas to either receive a flu vaccine or to wear a face mask for the flu season. This is one way in which we can try to protect our patients.

What can you do to try to prevent catching the flu? Other than vaccination you can:

- Wash your hands with soap and water or an alcohol based hand sanitizer frequently
- Keep up your resistance by eating nutritious foods, getting enough sleep, trying to decrease your stress in your life and by not smoking
- Regularly clean frequently touched surfaces such as remote controls, phones, door knobs or handles

What can I do to prevent the spread of the flu? People experiencing symptoms of seasonal flu, which may include fever, cough, sore throat, stuffy nose, muscle or body aches, and fatigue, should stay home from work or school, get rest, and drink plenty of fluids. When you cough, cover it by coughing into your sleeve or a tissue and dispose of it.

High risk persons who become ill with flu symptoms should see their health care provider promptly as well as anyone who is very sick. Flu complications such as pneumonia may result in serious illness, hospitalization and death in some cases, so get seen or call your provider's office to see if they think you should be seen. In some cases, there are medications which your doctor might recommend to fight the influenza virus. These medications may lessen the severity or length of illness and may be particularly helpful for those at highest risk. However, they should be started within the first couple days of symptoms.

The above and further helpful information about the flu may be found at the following website:

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention at <http://www.cdc.gov/flu/index.htm>

You can also call the CDC at 1-800-CDC-INFO. If you have any other questions about the flu, please contact Holly Rodenberg, Ho-Chunk Health Care Center Nurse Educator at 715-284-9851, ext. 5330 or discuss it with your medical provider.

January is Glaucoma Awareness Month

Submitted by Kevin Damask, Wisconsin Council of the Blind & Visually Impaired

As we recognize January as Glaucoma Awareness Month, it's important to note that glaucoma, which affects more than 2.7 million people in the U.S. over 40, is growing.

According to the National Eye Institute, by 2030, more than 4.2 million people are projected to have glaucoma, a 58 percent increase. The Glaucoma Research Foundation reports that glaucoma is the second leading cause of blindness in the world.

Since the onset of glaucoma poses no symptoms it is often referred to as the "sneak thief of sight." Once vision is lost, it's permanent. A person affected by glaucoma can lose up to 40 percent of their vision without noticing.

Glaucoma is actually a group of eye diseases that combine to rob sight. The most common groups affected by glaucoma are the middle aged and the elderly, primarily African-Americans and Hispanics. Among African-Americans, glaucoma is the leading cause of blindness. Also, siblings of people with glaucoma have a much higher risk of getting glaucoma.

Vision loss through glaucoma is caused by optic nerve damage. The optic nerve functions similar to an electric cable with more than a million wires and its main function is to send images from the eye to the brain.

Glaucoma comes in two forms: primary open-angle glaucoma (POAG) and angle-closure glaucoma. An increase in intraocular pressure (IOP) or pressure inside the eye could be the beginning of glaucoma. Sometimes normal tension glaucoma can be caused despite a normal IOP. In secondary glaucoma, optic pressure damage can be caused when another disease causes or contributes to increased eye pressure, resulting in vision loss.

Vision loss from glaucoma can begin with peripheral or side vision. While vision loss can come with little warning, the best way to detect glaucoma is through a comprehensive eye exam to begin treatment immediately.

Low vision evaluations are available at the Wisconsin Council of the Blind & Visually Impaired office and are conducted by Low Vision Therapist, Amy Wurf. To book your appointment or to learn more about the low vision evaluation, contact the Council toll-free at 1-800-783-5213.

To learn more about glaucoma and research to find a cure, go to: www.glaucoma.org.

The mission of the Council is to promote the dignity and independence of the people in Wisconsin who are blind or visually impaired by providing services, advocating legislation, and educating the general public. Teachings of the Medicine Wheel

Submitted by Desiree Gearing -Lancaster

Unfortunately, there is no “easy button” in life. We are all complex.....each of us with our own baggage, perceptions and world view. To add to our own unique individual and family circumstances, intergenerational trauma and the impact of historical trauma creates yet another layer of complexity, plaguing children and families of the Ho-Chunk Nation.

The development of the Ho-Chunk Nation Social Services Resource Center promotes an exciting enhancement to the Child & Family Services Division with the emphasis on prevention and early intervention through wrap-around programming and a holistic approach to service provision for our Ho-Chunk families.

Acknowledging the significance of empowerment and strength-based programming, the Resource Center broadens the dimensions of service provided to Ho-Chunk children and families by encompassing the concepts of culture and tradition, kinship and community connections, and spirituality. Research shows that early intervention services, which help children and families to address problems before they become crisis, can make the critical difference to families at risk.

“Spirituality” has been defined by Parker Palmer as “the heart’s longing to be connected with the largeness of life.” Spirituality has, in fact, been identified at the core of Resource Center programming, which includes the Teachings of the Medicine Wheel, authored by our own, Charity Thunder.

“The wellness of the individual is inseparable from harmony within the family and community.” The Medicine Wheel symbolizes the personal power within ourselves which enables one to become more whole and complete. It helps us to understand ourselves as well as life itself, steering us toward a positive direction in life and assisting us in an alignment of the physical, mental, emotional and spiritual realities.

tion programs and initiatives available through the Child & Family Services Resource Center. The Medicine Wheel was created as an educational tool/program designed to promote an environment of holistic thinking and seeing. The Medicine Wheel stands for “relationship, choice and balance.” Its educational teachings are designed for those who want to learn about creativity and problem-solving based on Native American principles and values. As noted in the brochure, “Learning about the Medicine Wheel is a life-long process that encourages developing and harmony with change. Practitioners and ‘leaders’ of Medicine Wheel principles and processes are grounded in an extremely ethical, life-affirming framework.”

Resource Center staff are trained as facilitators of the Medicine Wheel Teachings. The teachings can be applied to individuals of all ages, settings and situations. The beauty and value of this educational program is in the universal application of Medicine Wheel concepts.

The teachings meet individuals where they are at and can be taught in a wide variety of settings, individually or in any group or organizational venue. In addition, the Medicine Wheel teachings are flexible and can be tailored to the individual and/or group needs, relative to specificity, time allotment, and location. Requests for Medicine Wheel teachings should be referred to the Child & Family Services Centralized Intake at (715) 284-7749 or Toll-free at (888) 343-8190.

New pollution standards sought at Badger

Test results that are limited in their ability to detect low levels of contaminants in groundwater at the former Badger Army Ammunition Plant have prompted two state legislators to sign onto a petition asking the state to develop new enforcement standards for groundwater contamination.

In July, Citizens for Safe Water Around Badger petitioned the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources seeking the establishment of new regulations for component compounds of the hazardous dinitrotoluene, or DNT, created by the chemical breakdowns beneath the site.

During a Nov. 17 public forum at the Sauk City Public Library, DNR hydrologist Woody Myers said determining the levels of the components is difficult. He said when DNT degrades, smaller compounds separate from the original and dissolve like salt, degrading slowly.

“With DNT, we’re at the edge of the technology to be able to see what is there,” he said. “With the degradation products of DNT, most likely we’ll see nothing.”

Myers added that a negative result could mean the levels simply can’t be detected with current equipment.

Following the meeting, state Sen. Jon Erpenbach and state Rep. Dave Considine co-signed a letter from CSWAB executive director Laura Olah asking the DNR to respond to the organization’s earlier July petition for new enforcement standards.

Myers said the DNR will re-sample the wells to search for broken down components of DNT.

New contamination found

Myers also said the latest round of groundwater tests conducted this fall indicate a new small plume of contamination has been discovered in the far northwestern corner of the property now under the jurisdiction of the Ho-Chunk Nation.

“The smaller plume is of very little consequence because of where it’s at,” Myers said. “It’s at least 80 feet down.”

On the other side of the plant, the latest round of tests from six DNR monitoring wells near Gruber’s Grove Bay has found no risk posed by hazardous compounds, according to the Wisconsin Department of Health Services.

“We are confident there are no health concerns in consuming that water over the course of a lifetime,” DHS toxicologist Ryan Wozniak said. “They are below the levels at which we would expect any adverse health effects or concerns to occur.”

Despite the assurances, the U.S. Army has proposed constructing a $40 million public water system to serve nearly 400 properties near the site.

The Army has agreed to pay for the installation and operation of the system for the first five years, after which customers would be billed based on established water rates at the time.

Sitton told those at the Nov. 17 meeting that the Army’s responsibility for cleanup at the site will not go away.

“When the Army transferred the land, the deeds have a covenant that says if you find something the Army left behind, the Army comes back and fixes it,” Sitton said. “The Army will be involved with this for many decades, if not longer.”

Ho-Chunk Nation envisions sports complex

City, key players are enthusiastic about working with tribe on the proposed development

Lynn Armitage, Permission from Madison Magazine to Reprint

Next time you’re driving westbound on Interstate 94, near Ho-Chunk Gaming Madison, picture this: a sprawling, state-of-the-art sports and entertainment complex that rivals the best of them, luring throngs of enthusiastic visitors to the gateway of Madison like fans to a Badger football game.

Can you see it?

Dan Brown certainly can. The executive manager of Ho-Chunk Gaming Madison has held a vision for many years to develop 47.75 acres of vacant, tribally owned land adjacent to the casino. With all that undeveloped land and money to build, it’s just a matter of finding the big idea—and the right partners.

“We considered building a big-box retail store, an industrial park and even a corporate headquarters,” says Brown, who hired Urban Assets, a local planning and community development firm, to conduct a high-level study on what type of development made the most sense for both the Ho-Chunk Nation and the city of Madison. “At the end of the day, we are looking for a regional destination,” as well as an opportunity to share the Ho-Chunk’s unique heritage as the original inhabitants of the Madison area, he says. “We aren’t just a casino on the outskirts of town. This is our homeland, and we have a bigger story to tell.”

While on the hunt for development options, Brown and his team heard repeatedly from community members and public officials that there weren’t enough fields for rugby, soccer, lacrosse and other youth sports. The west side of Madison has Reddan Field in Verona, but the east side is sorely lacking. “We understand that some teams have to drive all the way to the Dells just for practices,” Brown says.

And so, the big idea was born: The tribe would build a much-needed sporting event complex for the city featuring indoor and outdoor playing fields, a cultural center that spotlights the rich history of the Ho-Chunk people, a hotel, a parking structure and possibly a conference center, too.

The beauty of this venture, according to Brown, is that it offers an opportunity to collaborate with the city. Preliminary plans call for the indoor fields to be built on Ho-Chunk land, and the twelve contiguous outdoor fields to be constructed on part of the thirty-six-hole Yahara Hills Golf Course—City of Madison Parks Department property that abuts the tribe’s property.

“The city will have to make a decision on whether they want to surrender some of the holes for the project,” says Brown. “We would not necessarily pursue the sports complex portion of the project unless we get a full commitment from the city to build the adjacent outdoor fields.”

So far, it appears that the city and other key players, including Madison tourism, planning and parks executives, are enthusiastic about doing business with the Ho-Chunk tribe, but there are many details and contingencies yet to work out, according to Madison Parks superintendent Eric Knepp. “The city is a little more guarded. We don’t say ‘yes’ to doing something until we have a solid master plan coming from our side.” And Knepp says the city has done very little in that regard.

Currently, one of the biggest issues facing the city is funding. “We are committed to working with the Ho-Chunk tribe because that’s what good neighbors do, as we have a mutual interest in a successful gateway to the city,” says Knepp. “But we really haven’t talked money yet, the heavy lift, and getting to that point will be when the real commitment comes from the city.”

Jamie Patrick, vice president of the Madison Area Sports Commission, a non-profit organization that brings sporting events to Dane County, believes a sports complex is just what the city needs. “We’d be able to attract regional, national and international tournaments, which would help fill up our hotels and restaurants,” says Patrick. Plus, it would solve the field-shortage problem. “If we can hit those two things on the head, we have a winner on our hands—as long as it is done right, built right and managed right.”

To keep the momentum for the project moving toward the tribe’s goal of a potential first-phase opening in 2018, monthly ongoing talks continue between the tribe and city officials. Little by little, progress is being made on the Ho-Chunk’s end. Architects are drafting a master conceptual plan, and a wetland delineation report is close to being completed.

“The good news is, we’ve learned that we are able to build on a vast majority of Ho-Chunk land,” says Brown, who was happy to discover that barely five percent of the Ho-Chunk land is actually wetlands. “We were surprised because it’s kind of swampy over here.”

Still, there are some definite hurdles that will have to be overcome before the project can grow sturdier legs. For one, traffic concerns. Currently, there is only one way in and out of the Ho-Chunk Casino area—a very dangerous intersection at Mill Pond Road and state highways 12/18—so the Wisconsin Department of Transportation has been brought in to the project discussions.

Obviously, building something this ambitious takes time. Perhaps too much time, says Melissa Huggins, a certified planner and principal at Urban Assets who conducted the initial in-depth feasibility study.

“Developers come here and say, ‘Why can I get stuff done in Chicago and I can’t get stuff done in Madison?’ We have a very wonderful planning staff, but they hold the developers’ feet to the fire.”

The parks superintendent jumps to the city’s defense.

“No one will ever fully appreciate the process the city goes through and how long it takes,” says Knepp. “This project feels like it’s going somewhere, and it very well could. But planning this much space will just take some time and some process, for sure.”

Time has certainly helped heal strained relations between the city and the Ho-Chunk tribe dating back nearly a decade, when Dane County residents opposed a proposed expansion of Ho-Chunk gaming operations.

“There are some hangover perceptions about gaming that came up when we were presenting to the parks commission,” says Huggins, who also recalls overwhelming support, too. “We just need to do some educating about how gaming fits into the nation and all tribes, and what its role is.”

Past history aside, Knepp is encouraged to be working with the Ho-Chunk tribe to create a positive outcome for Madison. “Dan Brown and his leadership have a lot to do with why we are having these conversations,” he says.

The Ho-Chunk Nation remains hopeful about the vision for the sports complex and entertainment center. “We have two governments trying to work together, so we don’t expect this to happen overnight,” Brown says. “I hesitate to use the word ‘perfect,’ but it sure is coming together nicely.”

New Tomah fire truck dedicated to former Fire Chief Decorah

The Tomah Fire Department members thought it was fitting to honor former Fire Chief Kevin Decorah for the more than 13 years of service to the department.

For that reason, they dedicated the new Incident Command Center truck in Decorah's name on Thursday, December 3, at the North Side Fire Station in Tomah.

A metal plaque was ordered to be placed on the side of the new truck, however, it was not ready at the time of the dedication ceremony. Instead the inscription was on paper and was on display at the dedication.

"I was very surprised and humbled. It is a great honor," Decorah said at the event.

Decorah served the Tomah Fire Department from the end of the year 2000 to May 2014.

The truck was purchased with the help of the Ho-Chunk Nation, which donated $80,000 toward the design, build and purchase. The donation was made on April 15,

The Decorah family was on hand December 3 at the North Side Fire Station to witness the dedication ceremony.

2014. Decorah was fire chief at the time of the donation and when the new truck was ordered.

A contribution of $200,000 was made by the Tomah City Council and $70,000 was obtained through a "Hunters' Night Out" fundraiser that was conducted by the Tomah firefighters.

One other time a truck was dedicated to a Tomah Fire Department staff member. A ladder truck was donated to former Assistant Fire Chief Jerry Herrick who passed away.

The Incident Command Center truck was ordered as a custom design from Pierce Manufacturing in Appleton, Wisconsin, made to the Tomah Fire Departments exact requested specifications.

"They said they wished it had been completed at a different time so they could have taken it to trade shows," Decorah said. "It is a different design, a niche that needed to be filled. If it had been finished in summer, they would have taken it to the International Fire Chiefs Association Convention in Chicago."

House of Wellness Fitness & Aquatic Center recently held two food drives

Submitted by Lance Tallmadge, Fitness Supervisor-House of Wellness

The first was "Burpees for Food". Many of our staff took part. Barrels were placed in the entrance hallway with the participating staff members name on it. People donated food items in the barrel of the staff member that they wanted to see do burpees. Items had to be at least 10 ounces to count as one burpee. As a group we ended up having to do 374 burpees. The food collected totaled almost 600 pounds.

Donations were made to the Central Wisconsin Community Action Council which serves 6 counties in the Wisconsin Dells area. Donations were also given to Lisa Bargender, Social Worker at the House of Wellness for distribution to tribal community members.

The Burpees for Food collection and the day burpees were done on Friday, November 20th. Staff participants were Jodel Greendeer, William Kemp II, Terrence Johnson, Paul Roberts Jr, Dmitriy Gumennyi, Lance Tallmadge, Erika Gerhardt, and Scott Gilbeck.

The 2nd food drive we had was in conjunction with a membership drive to the Fitness & Aquatic Center. In exchange for a donation of 4 pounds of food, a new member would receive 1 month free membership added to their 3 month membership. I don't have a total weight of what was donated but I would estimate it was in excess of 150 pounds. This food was donated to the Reedsburg Food Pantry and was accepted by Bess Little. I've attached a picture of her with the 2 grocery carts of food.

Woodworking class provides toys, play equipment to immersion daycare

Ken Luchterhand
Staff Writer

Even though it's not Christmas quite yet, children at the Ho-Chunk First Immersion Daycare will have some new wooden furniture and toys to play on and with.

The items they getting are rather unusual and custom made, just for them.

One of the students displays a ship steering wheel that he made for the rocking boat.

Mary Thundercloud-Eary arranged to have the wooden furniture and toys made specifically for the daycare through a wood-working class in Milwaukee.

"My son, Hunter, was in a cabinet making class about four years ago," she said. "I asked the instructor if it would be possible to have some items made for our daycare."

That instructor is Dan Stich, who is the cabinet making and woodworking instructor at Milwaukee Area Technical College. He agreed to make the projects with help from his students.

"She was looking for toys and play equipment for children ages 6 months to 4 years," Stich said.

The daycare in Christmas Mountain, near Wisconsin Dells, provides services to children ages 0 to 4 during weekdays and are taught only the Ho-Chunk language.

The first thing the instructor and students at MATC was to plan what they were going to make and then how to make it. Daycare Administrator Mary Thundercloud-Eary had seen a similar rocker on a Web site named "Pinterest" and recommended something like it to Stich and his students.

Besides the rocking tug boat, the instructor and students made several wooden wagons filled with wooden building blocks.

"It was excellent," Stich said. "It was fun building and it was fun thinking outside the box. It was good for the students. They got a lot out of it."

Most all of the items were made from Douglas fir, which stands up really well in outdoor conditions, Stich said. They used acrylic paint so that it could withstand the wet and cold conditions, plus it is non-toxic for children.

The wagons were made from basswood and maple so they would be strong and durable.

"We're extremely happy to be receiving them," Thundercloud-Eary said. "For the children, it will be good exercise and good for development of large motor skills.

Two of the students try out the rocking boat before the finishing touches have been completed.

"We're fortunate to have Milwaukee Area Technical College provide all the labor and materials," she said. "It's good for the children, but it's also good experience for the students at MATC. They had to research and design the rocking boat, then layout the materials and form them to work as components." The boat was more difficult to build that just the standard cutting of wood, nailing, gluing and sanding. The rocker bottom of the boat needed to be soaked in water and bent into the correct shape, then held in that position by forms until it was completely dry, Stich said.

Koenig and Badgers mute the Temple Owls

Marlon WhiteEagle
Editor

On Saturday, December 5, the Wisconsin Badgers improved to 6-3 on their 2015-2016 season by muting the Temple Owls with a final score on 76-60.

The Badgers got double digit scoring from team leaders: Bronson Koenig (17), Nigel Hayes (18), and Zak Showalter (11). Hayes had his third double-double on the season finishing with 18 points and 12 rebounds.

The Badgers and the Owls battle for the first 7 minutes of the game, exchanging lead changes 6 times. The Badgers struck first with a layup by Zak Showalter.

But Temple's Devin Coleman answered back with a 3 point shot.

Ethan Happ added 2 points with a low post move.

Owl, Quenton Decosey hit a 3 point shot of his own to put Temple up by 2 points, 6-4.

Happ scored again to tie the game at 6-6 after 4 minutes of play.

Vitto Brown fouled Daniel

Dingle, sending him to the free throw line. Dingle hit both his free throws to give the Owls the lead, but that would be their last lead of the game.

Bronson Koenig nailed a 3 pointer to give the Badgers a 9-8 lead that the Owls would never overcome.

Ethan Happ and Nigel Hayes added 4 points from the free throw line while the Owls' Alston scored from the field.

Hayes also made a layup and Koenig hit another 3 point shot. Freshman Alex Illikainen caught a Koenig pass inside to add 2 more points for the Badgers. The Badgers were now up by 10 points, 20-10.

Charlie Thomas and Alex Illikainen lead the Badgers on a 10-2 run, capitalized by a Thomas 3 point shot that ignited the Kohl Center crowd.

Nigel Hayes dunked a missed 3 point shot of Showalter to put the Badgers up by 16 points with just under 4 minutes left in the half.

Showalter banked a last minute shot off the glass to put the Badgers up 37-26 at the half way mark. Six Badgers had 6 points at the half: Hayes, Happ, Showalter, Koenig, Thomas, and Illikainen.

The Badgers used the first 7 minutes of the second half to increase their lead to 18 points. Vitto Brown hit a jumper. Showalter hit a 3 point shot. Hayes, Koenig, and Showalter all drove the lane for layups. Hayes got a tip in basket and got to the free throw line. The Badgers outscored the Owls 15-8 during that time.

Wisconsin got more even and balanced scoring from Ethan Happ and Charlie Thomas in the middle of the second half. Koenig hit a jump shot to maintain the Badgers 18 point lead.

Temple relied on their top scorer: Decosey, Bond, and Coleman to keep them in the game. Levan Alston Jr. and Trey Lowe came off the bench and pitch in where they could for the Owls. The Badgers held Decosey and Coleman to below average scoring.

Bronson Koenig (24) shoots over a Temple defender as the Wisconsin Badgers improve to 6-3 on the season.

Overall, the Badgers held the Owls 10 points below their average point totals. The Owls fell to 3-4 on their season.

The Badgers now have a

7 game home stretch facing in state competition from Milwaukee, Marquette, and Green Bay. Wisconsin will also face Texas A&M-Corpus Christi and conference play against Purdue and Rutgers.

Wisconsin Rapids Riverkings mentor Ho-Chunk Youth

Submitted by Lynette LeGarde, HCN Legislature-Chief Communications Officer

The Ho-Chunk Youth met with the Wisconsin Rapids Riverkings for a mentorship session on Wednesday, December 2, 2015 at the YMCA in Port Edwards, Wisconsin. The Ho-Chunk Nation began a two-year sponsorship with the Wisconsin Rapids River-ings. The Wisconsin Rapids Riverkings are part of the Junior A Hockey League which has players aged 16-20 years old. The players come from across the United States and Canada to play in the league. The league provides opportunity for player advancement to reach the "next" level of the sport either in college or eventually pro hockey.

The youth met with General Manager Marty Quarters, Riverkings players Tyler Carey, Austin Luxford, Ryan Mantz, Sam Nelson, Tyler Harkins and Riverkings mascot Reggie the Riverking. The Riverkings discussed the game of hockey, equipment, diet, motivation, travel, recruiting and teamwork. Marty Quarters stated, "There are three things you can control. How hard you work. How much rest you get and what you put in your body." These three factors are very important for the athletes. The Riverkings organization focuses on promoting the personal character of the players. They recruit based on finding players that are talented and also will be good for the community. They want the players to be the best that they can be and emphasize doing things the right way. Quarters also mentioned, "If you do good things all the time, good things will come your way." The Riverkings love the sport of hockey and encourage you to come out for a game.

Ho-Chunk Nation Youth Services Coordinator Angelina Decorah said, "The students and staff of Nekoosa Youth & Learning Center enjoyed meeting with the Wisconsin Rapids Riverkings. It was a great learning experience for all of us. They have invited us to come and skate with them, and the students are very excited for this opportunity to learn more about hockey."

The next Wisconsin Rapids Riverkings home game will be on December 11, 2015 against the Detroit Fighting Irish. The game starts at 7:30pm at the South Wood County Recreation Center in Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin. All Ho-Chunk youth have free admission to all Wisconsin Rapids Riverking home games this season. Go Riverkings!!!

Larry Knudsen, President of Two Buffalo Construction Supplies & Program Host of Indigenous in Music

Submitted by Sal Whitehorse

When Ho-Chunk Entrepreneur/Social Entrepreneur Larry Knudsen was growing up in south Minneapolis, he never dreamed he would be president of his own business and a program host of a radio program heard across the nation. Knudsen said "I never thought this would ever happen."

Knudsen was referring to his success as founder and president of Two Buffalo Construction Supplies Inc., a Minnesota based business with office/warehouse in Stillwater and Bradenton, FL that specialized in roofing, waterproofing and LED lighting supplies and also to his music program Indigenous in Music that is heard every week on radio stations across the US, featuring music and interviews.

Starting out as a General Contractor in 1995 in the roofing trade Two Buffalo expanded into windows, doors and siding. With many years of company growth, it all came to a stop in 2005.

"Roofing is a business that succeeds when storms come and leave hail damage and there was not one major storm that year," Knudsen said.

In 2005, Larry moved Two Buffalo into the construction supply arena. With the success of their first major project, they supplied all the roofing supplies to the Midtown Exchange building in South Minneapolis. Then in 2008, Two Buffalo hit it big and was one of the suppliers on the Minneapolis Target Center's new roof, the fifth largest green roofing in the country. Since then they have established many partners and finishing projects including the Minneapolis/St. Paul Light Rail project, Minneapolis Convention center, Green Bay Packers Lambeau field, and Tampa International Airport and now currently working on the new Minnesota Vikings/US Bank stadium in downtown Minneapolis.

Larry Knudsen

Recently they added American Made LED lighting in their product line. "The current explosion in LED technology into the commercial lighting market has given us an interesting and challenging idea; it's perfect timing to get into the American Indian casino arena, as we will be able to help save our nations money on their energy consumption," says Larry.

In 2006 Larry starting the music program Indigenous in Music, "Back then, the show lasted a half hour, today it's a 2 hour program" Knudsen said, Today the show is recorded in the new Two Buffalo Studio's in Sarasota, FL.

The goal is develop and market this show to the American Indian radio stations across the United States and Canada. It provides music, interviews and the native news to the general public. Both

Ho-Chunk employees observe Pearl Harbor Day

The Flag Song and four service songs, one for each branch of the U.S. military, are offered in 74th anniversary of the Pearl Harbor attack on December 7.

During the Pearl Harbor observance, flags in front of the Tribal Office Building were raised to half-staff to remember the fallen service men during the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941.

Thompson prevails at District One Community Center chess tournament

Submitted by Leslie Thompson

October 14, 2015 was a very special day for me. It was the day of the annual chess tournament my friends kept reminding me of. It was held at District One Community Center through the Ho-Chunk Nation. It was also exactly one year ago to the date my sister Louise suffered a stroke and was paralyzed on her right side. I wanted to dedicate the chess tournament to her. I had made some key mistakes the last 3 years in the tournament, and I couldn't make them again this year. For one, I had to move much slower than I did in previous years. Instead of moving quick and fast, I had to move slower and analyze the chess board looking for weakness while avoiding my own mishaps and blunders. Sometimes my opponent moves, and its effect three of four moves later in to the game. My professor in college once said, "I have a quick mind..." but even that can get a person in to trouble if they are not careful.

I couldn't put in the time like I did before in the past with chess. I had my sister Louise to look after and take care of, plus my math studies etc. Before I would go down to the local library almost every day, go online and play chess with people all over the world. But now I couldn't do that. I had to attend to my sister's well being and needs. Fixing supper, lunch, breakfast, physical therapy, making appointments, etc. Now I was making it to the library about every two weeks to play chess. Sometimes I would get there about an hour before the library would closed. The librarians, Mrs. Vicki Fischer and Kay were so helpful.

They would say, "There is a computer open Leslie, number seven...." I am very grateful to them and the rest of the staff there.

I had a lot of apprehensiveness a good two weeks before the chess match. I felt I wasn't completely ready. I kept thinking if I only had one more month to train, study the game, and play online. I wanted to win the chess tournament for my sister Louise, but I would also be grateful if I finished in the top three. I felt finishing third or second is better than not playing at all. I kept thinking about the games and tournaments I had played in the past and the mistakes I made. And also the challenges I would get out and about from people. One guy got a hold of me twice and asked me if I wanted to play a chess game for $100 a game. I told him I would. We met at a neutral spot at the powwow grounds. He said he lived an hour away and really wanted to play chess with me. He was really nice and very respectful when we finally met. I ended up losing two games to him, but winning five or six games in a row. A few months later he got a hold of me again. He wanted to play for a $100 a game, same as before. We met at the Kwik Trip. He had been talking smack, saying he had improved a lot since we played at the powwow grounds, and this time he was going to really beat me. He asked if I was scared. I'd be lying if I said no. We then met at the Kwik Trip in Black River Falls in the early part of the year.

Pressure does add a new dimension. We had played a few hours, each game lasting between 45 minutes to an hour. As we played, I notice he was getting very fatigued, physically and most noticeably, mentally. I knew he was totally on the ropes. I was sacrificing my bishop in to his pawn to disable him from castling. Then I would attack with my two knights, bishop and pawns. I was able to send him reeling with nowhere to go. Then the queen would come out and close the game with a checkmate. Though sometimes this technique could easily backfire, but this wasn't one of those times. The final score: 6-1. I never heard from him again.

The night of the chess tournament was here. There was pizza and pop for everyone. It was double elimination. Tony was supervising the tournament as she also plays chess herself. It turned out again to be a lot of fun as the players and others were having fun and laughing. I was able to go through the rounds good, playing up to the finals. In the finals I would face a young player by the name of Larry. He was 18 years old and beat some good players twice his age and also beating last years' player who came in second a year ago in the chess tournament.

When Larry and I met in the finals, I had already played him earlier and won. He played very competent, and I knew I had to play well, no mistakes. I played courteous at first, then became aggressive and began to put pressure on Larry's broken position. He had made a key blunder in the opening. When grand masters and masters play chess, if they sometimes blunder in the opening, there first eleven moves, they will usually just tip over the king and forfeit the game. A blundered opening is the beginning of the end. Like a sweater with a lose thread coming undone.

It's extremely difficult to overcome if the pressure from the opponent remains.

Larry was sent back reeling with his king in the middle board. Now it was a process of elimination. It was time for the queen to enter the game as it waited patiently on the D1 square for the coup de gras, the death knell (knock out).

After the game, Larry and I shook hands. It was over. He had played well even though his position was lost. I asked Larry how he learned to play. He said, "Manual Carriaga showed me" (a Ho-Chunk Nation member). I encouraged Larry to keep playing and learning, also, play online, the internet. I had showed him a good chess opening to master, the E4. Roy Lopez, a priest from the 15th century, who came up with the opening. If Larry keeps learning, he'll be a monster in a year or two. They will have to put him in a cage for the chess tournament.

I got home from the chess tournament and told my sister "Baby" Louise I had won. She was excited and yelled, "Yeah!" She was very happy. Winning four years in a row wasn't too bad, but I would of traded the last three years away just for this one nights' win. I wanted to win the chess tournament for Louise. I am truly grateful to the Ho-Chunk Nation and District One Community Center for hosting the annual open chess tournament.

"Resilience, Revolution & Inspiration." Courageous storytelling is a sacred journey. THE NATIVE AMERICAN INTER-GENERATIONAL STORYTELLING PROJECT is the inaugural project of DREAMLODGE ARTS. The mission of DREAMLODGE ARTS is to turn artistic passions into viable careers. The Native American Inter-generational Storytelling Project is a program that is based upon the cultural strength of Native American Oral Traditions. Historically these are stories that have been passed down from generation to generation, giving our youth & community a sense of belonging while instilling our beliefs, values, and traditions.

The six participants will write, rehearse & perform their own stories. Utilizing the theme, "Resilience, Revolution & Inspiration," we will use storytelling & theater as vehicles to foster creativity and self-confidence, promote critical thinking skills and develop community advocates who can share life experiences, knowledge, and wisdom. Our training will enlighten the storytellers so in the end they will understand and respect the theatrical and creative aspect of this craft. The goal is to see our six professionally trained storytellers actively engaged in the Chicago arts scene (and beyond). Our participants will perform at the Victory Gardens Theatre, Lifeline Theatre, Storylab, The Prop Theatre and (4) open mics.

We will recruit 6 Chicago area American Indian community members; 3 Women & 3 men, ages 18 to 80 (and above) to write and perform two 10-minute stories in professional settings. The seven-month project is set to begin in January 2016 and end in July 2016. The storytellers will participate in two tracks; they will meet on Monday (Performance) & Thursday (Creation/creative writing) evenings.

More children to receive gifts through Hocak Woga

Ken Luchterhand
Staff Writer

Hocak Woga is off to a great start this year, doubling the number of children receiving gifts.

Hocak Woga is an annual Christmas gift program offered to youth who are working with the services offered by Children and Family Services Division of Ho-Chunk Nation Social Services.

“Last year we had around 100 children on our list to receive presents,” said CFS Director Valerie Blackdeer. “This year we have 203.”

The reason for the increase is that more children are being helped through the Resource Center, which has added many programs available, she said. It’s the former juvenile justice system, now adding other dimensions by the coordinated services team.

The Family Resources Program is a new voluntary program that provides services that have emphasized information about their culture to the children.

“We’ve increased the scope this year, focusing on preventative services,” Blackdeer said. “We’re addressing such issues as intergenerational trauma while trying to maintain and establish cultural connections.”

The support to Hocak Woga from individuals and business has been great.

“This year we had an overwhelming response, receiving cash donations and toy donations,” Blackdeer said.

For instance, the pharmacy and clinic at the House of Wellness in Baraboo had a soup day fundraiser and donated that money to the Hocak Woga.

The Gilbert Brown Foundation provided Packer tickets that were raffled, with the proceeds going toward Woga. Also, Champions Resort in Galesville sponsored many tags.

But, overall, it’s been mostly individuals making donations to the cause, she said.

“It’s going to be a good year for the kids who are going to receive presents,” Blackdeer said. “We’ll begin delivering presents next week.”
